Postcolonial Questions and Performances Presents Anthony Bogues

Reframing History and Archives: Towards an Alternative Public Humanities

Monday, April 11, 2016
3:30 p.m.
Paul Robeson Main Gallery
Paul Robeson Campus Center

Barrington Anthony Bogues is the Asa Messer Professor of Humanities and Critical Theory at Brown University, where he is the inaugural director of the Center for the Study of Slavery and Justice. He is a professor of African Studies and African and African Diaspora Art and affiliated to the departments of political science and modern culture and media. A curator and writer, he is currently curating a major show on African and Haitian art scheduled to open in December 2016. The author of six books and over 80 articles, his latest book is From Revolution to Imagined Landscape: The Art of Edouard Duval Carrie (2014). He is currently finishing a book on freedom and human emancipation, as well as one on questions of archives and radical revisionist historiography in historical writing within the black radical intellectual tradition. He is an honorary professor in African Studies at the University of Cape Town in South Africa.

EVENT INFORMATION:
Postcolonial Questions and Performances Presents: Anthony Bogues
Reframing History and Archives: Towards an Alternative Public Humanities
Monday, April 11, 2016, 3:30 p.m.
Paul Robeson Main Gallery, Paul Robeson Campus Center

For more information please, contact Madelyn Munoz-Barttam mmunoz@andromeda.rutgers.edu

CONTACT:
Office of the Chancellor
The Collaboratory
Center on Migration and the Global City
Clement A. Price Institute on Ethnicity, Culture & the Modern Experience
Department of English
Department of African American and African Studies